

This problem affects a lot of people on campus eating at the dining hall. Since there is no way to keep track of how many meal swipes you have or use, people run into problems such as not having any left and not knowing till you are ordering your food. This is a common problem at the University of South Carolina and there are some good solutions out there such as building an app, etc. This does not just affect us but other universities as well and that's both grad students and undergraduate students.
